

ACCES I/O Products, Inc. Linux Software Licensing Information

This document is intended to clarify the licensing provided by ACCES for its Linux based software. This document does not necessarily apply to any software written by ACCES for other operating systems, or to software written as part of custom programming sales to ACCES customers. Please read this document carefully, especially if you are interested in redistributing ACCES software.

Any ACCES software that is released under the GPL v2 will have a header block of comments at the top of every source file explaining that the software is released under the GPL. If this block is not present, then the software is not released under the GPL.

In addition to the GPL license ACCES offers parallel licenses to its software that customers may request. These licenses are granted on a case by case basis, and specific details can be obtained by calling the ACCES software department at (800)-326-1649.

The purpose of this parallel licensing strategy is simple. We can release our software under the GPL allowing the open source community and our customers to use it while preserving our copyright to the code. We can also grant our customers the ability to incorporate our products into their own projects without forcing them to GPL their software if they don't want to.
